WARNINGS

OVERHEAD POWER LINES

Be advised that an overhead power line dissects the camping area. Please note the following guidelines and precautions:

- Before setting up camp, avoid pitching your tent or caravan directly under or close to an overhead power line. Please be particularly aware when erecting TV aerials or radio masts.
- Overhead power lines are often uninsulated (bare) and can carry high voltages so always hold long objects horizontally, parallel with the ground, when walking under lines.
- The lowest-voltage overhead lines can produce 10,000 times more current than is required to kill a person. It can be fatal to touch electricity wires by human touch or with an object at low voltage. Even domestic voltage (230 volts) can be lethal.
- Don't assume wires on wooden poles are telephone wires.
- Never assume electrical equipment is dead, even if wires have fallen or broken. Power can be switched back on without warning.
- Electricity can jump gaps.
- Metal and carbon-fibre tent poles, guy lines, TV aerials and almost any long object can conduct electricity.
- Rubber boots will not protect you.
- Don't light a fire / barbecue under an overhead line, as the heat could cause the wires to sag dangerously low or to break.
- Electricity poles and pylons are usually fitted with yellow 'danger of death' notices, and lines should be too. Take note of any warning signs and stay well away from the marked area.
- If there's a line close to where you are setting up your tent, awning or caravan, keep well away. Don't assume it's a telephone wire. If you have any doubts, please contact the Campsite Manager in the Campsite Office.
- Do not fly kites in the campsites under any circumstances.

WHAT TO DO IN AN EMERGENCY

- If you come within five metres of a damaged wire, move away as quickly as you can, and warn others to stay well clear. You don't have to touch a wire that is on the ground to be injured or killed. Electrical current can travel a long way through the ground – even further if the wire falls on a fence or metallic objects.
- Always assume the lines are live, even if they're not sparking.
- If you have a mobile with you, call the emergency services.
- If you're inside a caravan (or tent or mobile home), stay inside until the emergency services arrive.
- Never touch a tent, awning, frame, caravan, post or fence you suspect is touching an electricity line.
- Wires can re-energise at any time without warning.
